Explosive Novel Set in India Looks at Life Differently

After losing her mother three years earlier, Sharlene McGowan moves to India to be with her famous father, Dr. Greg McGowan. Sharlene has a knack for finding trouble, but little does she know that the trouble she encounters in India is not on a small scale.

When Sharlene insists on going to a New Delhi marketplace, her father has important meetings at the embassy and asks his assistant, Sajiv, to accompany Sharlene to keep her safe. When a bomb explodes at the embassy, Sharlene and Sajiv take shelter together at his cousin's home. They are visited by an army colonel who wants to unravel the bombing plot before the terrorists can strike again.

This exciting novel explores the Indian way of looking at life and the incredible experiences waiting there for adventurous souls. The Grand New Delhi Escapade is a nail biter.

About the Author: Mary Page lives in Baytown, Texas. After facing numerous personal challenges, she met a young man from India on Facebook who shared the tragedy of his brother's death at a young age. The author had lost a daughter at birth. "We talked about when someone dies it is the realization of what they miss in life afterwards. We thought about the people they do not meet, the stories they miss, and the events they never participate in. India has a different way of looking at things that helped me sort through my issues." She is writing the sequel.
